CALCUTTA.

We have seen a letter from a Colonel of the Army in England to his Comrade here, dated in Jan. and expressing regret that he could not find any thing had been done about the half-batta measures at home. That like every other important matter it had to be referred to the "Great Duke" who had no leasure to attend to such trifles, and tha though any thing was better than suspense, still it could hardly be regretted that the said Arch Duke had not but taken the matter up, for that there was no doubt he would dispose of it off hand, arbitrarily, and unjustly; his sole beau ideal and standard of right in India being every thing at Modras, where alone he obtained his Military knowledge in the end of the last and beginning of the preseut century!

The Company's paper forgeries had excited a prodigious stir amongst the holders: but the conviction was universal that the Company's Government would come forward instantly to replace, by new and genuine papers, those which were rendered worthless to the confiding holders, through the want of vigilance or of skill on the part of the public Agents of Government. How the unlucky holders will be "struck all of a heap," when they find what has not been done in this matter up to this present May day instant, 1830! That no only are their claims on the Company, whether on a question of liberality or bounty, repulsed utterly by Government, but that the complaints have been driven into Court and obliged to contend the question in all the strictness of legal hostility, and in the most expensive and re-iterated form.

We understand that, by this opportunity, advices have been received of the recall of Sir J. Grant by his Majesty's orders, to reply before the King in Council, to the allegations contained in a Petition from the E. I. Company to His Majesty.

The main allegation, and indeed the sole one we apprehend, of any moment is that of having shut up the King's Court, instead of keeping it open and persisting in so much of the usual proceedings and process as the Military Government would allow to go on unobstructedly.

The Judicial conduct of an Indian Judge we suppose, cannot be questioned even by the King, although unfortunately the prerogative of dismissal may be execised against our Judges precisely as against a Judge in England before the revolution.

The great question of Habeas Corpus ad testificandum is not therefore touched by this proceeding, it would appear; it is settled as far as such a matter can be settled by the recent singular decision of the privy Council, a decision which we predict cannot long endure unless or least some other form of process can be devised for securing the "forthcominguess" of witnesses.—Ben. Hur. April. 22.

The following is detailed account of the loss of the Lady Holland taken from the South African Advertiser of the 17th and 24th of February.

Loss of the Lady Holland.

"Information was received in town of Monday last, by Messrs. Borradailes, Thompson, and Pillans, of the 'Lady Holland,' Captain Snell, having struck on a reef of rocks on the north end of Dassen Island, at about half past 10 o'clock on Sunday night. The night was very dark, and it was blowing a strong gale of wind from the S. E. A vigilant look out had been kept from sunse', at which period no appearance of land could be discerned: a few minutes before the vessel struck, the man stationed in the forecastle called out "Breakers a head!"—the helm was immediately put down, but she struck before coming round. Some time previously the lead was hove, and no bottom could be found at 120 fathoms. Captain Snell ordered the mainmast to be cut away; this was done, but it fell backward on the mizenmast, and carried that away also. The boats were then got out, and the whole of the passengers and crew got safely ashore at Dassen Island, without however, being able to secure either provisions or water. A great portion of the cargo, it is hoped, will be saved—much of it consisting of Madeira wine in casks.

As soon as the intelligence of this unfortunate accident reached the Agents, they, with the utmost promptitude dispatched the 'Constitution,' and Messrs. Sinclair's boats, &c. together with a waggon, for the purpose of relieving the passengers and crew, and of saving as much of the cargo as can be got at.

The Falcon, sloop, the cutter George, the Port Captain's launch, the 'North-wester,' and several other boats went off to the spot, in order to afford assistance; the Agents also made a request that Government would give directions to the nearest Authorities, to provide for the protection of any of the goods which may float ashore. On Captain Snell's arrival in Town, further particulars will no doubt be learned.

Dassen Island is about forty miles to the north-ward of Table Bay, and nearly midway between the latter and Saldanha Bay.

The 'Lady Holland' sailed from London in October last bound to Madras and Calcutta.

Passengers—Mrs. Lascelles, Mrs. Story, Mrs Mann. Mrs. Duff, Miss Saunders, Miss Lightfoot, Miss Dual, Miss Molesworth, Miss Baillie, Miss Warburton, two Misses Byrne, Colonel De Graves, Mr. Lascelles, Madras Civil Service; Captain Poulton; Captain Story, Lieutenant Laycock; Mr. Assistant Surgeon Allardyce; Cadet Durand, and Mr. Gibbon."—[South African Advertiser, Feb. 17.

Accounts from the wreck of the Lady Holland at Dassen Island state, that but very little of the cargo has been saved: about 20 or 30 pipes of Madeira wine, and a few packages and trinkets, are all that will be recovered, the rest of the cargo having floated out to sea, or sunk among the rocks. The hull of the vessel went to pieces on Friday last, which destroyed the hopes entertained by Captain Snell, of being able to get a valuable engine and other articles from the hold. The loss sustained by some of the passengers is very great; and we learn that a Minister, connected with the Church of Scotland on his way to India to superintend the formation of a College there, has unfortunately lost the whole of the Books and other articles which were in his charge. There were also several ladies on board, who, by this distressing accident, are thrown almost destitute on the world, without the means of reaching their destination, or indeed of present support: their case has excited general sympathy, and we understand that some humane persons are divising a plan for their relief.

Amidst the horrors of a shipwreck it would seem almost incredible, yet such is the fact, that some men, who went to the scene to assist in saving the property, have been detected in pilfering jewels and other valuable trinkets when every exertion should have been making to snatch the cargo from perdition, these abandoned persons were occupied solely in committing depredations! It would be premature to say anything further at present; but the particulars will come before the public in due time.

It was stated on Wednesday last, that an application had been made to Government, by the Agents for the vessel, to issue instructions to provide for the safety of any of the cargo which might be brought ashore: this application was granted with the utmost readiness; the following is an extract of the letter received from the Secretary to Government, Lieutenant Colonel Bell, by Messrs. Borradailes, Thompson, and Pillans:—

"The necessary instructions have been issued to the proper Authorities, to afford all the assistance in their power, in saving such parts of the wreck and cargo of the late ship Lady Holland, as may be washed or brought ashore, and in protecting the same from depredation or injury."—South African Advertiser, Feb. 24.—*Supp. the Govt. of a house, in the lines of the 19th—the house is divided into two rooms by a low tatta partition; in one room I live, the other is occupied by a drummer in the Regt. named Daniel. I remember when the girl was murdered—it was a Thursday, two or three months ago. I dont know how many days are in a month. I say it was 2 or 3 months because the other woman says so. I don't know how many weeks nor how many Sundays there are in a month. I have no way of calculating a month or week or year;—I don't make any such calculations. I don't know how many new or full moons there are in a month. I don't know any thing at all about the moon, only when I sit at my window and see the moon shine I say—"there is the moon! I don't know how often my husband has received his pay since the occurrence; he receives and keeps his pay himself; he does not give us money, he only gives us bread. On the Thursday I spoke of I was in my room; my son was with me and a woman grinding rice from outside. I thought I heard some noise on the other side of the tatta, and I stopped the grinding stone; on doing so I heard the voice of a girl crying out "mother mother." (umma, umma). The voice came from the other side of the tatta partition from Daniel's room; the partition is so low that I can see over it when standing on the floor. I looked over it and saw the prisoner at the bar stricking the deceased girl with a sword; she was stabbing her with the point. On witnessing this I ran out of the house and gave the alarm;—all the people gathered. I continued giving the alarm and the crowd continued to collect. I don't recollect who assembled. When I saw the prisoner over the tatta she was holding the arm of the girl with her left hand and striking her with her right. I did not hear her say any thing while she was striking; the woman who was grinding did not see all this, as she was sitting at the grinding stone;—after I came out of the house I saw neither prisoner nor deceased. I only saw them at the actual time of the murder; after going out and giving the alarm I did nothing, but sat down at the door of my house. The people who assembled were standing looking at the spectacle. I do not know whether any of them went into the house or not. While I looked over the Tatta wall and saw her striking I am sure there was no one in that room but the prisoner and the deceased. I know Daniel the Drummer; he was not there,—had gone out for water. I had seen the prisoner go into the house with water a short time before, and I saw no one else go in or out of the house. I don't know who the little girl was; she was a Jew's daughter and used to come to Daniel's house to play. I don't know the prisoner's name; but I am quite sure she is the person I saw stabbing the girl with a sword. I had seen her before that day in Daniel's house;—she is Daniel's wife. She is kept by him and they lived as man and wife. I don't know how long she had lived so. I am in my house; they in theirs; they quarrelled almost every day—how could I help it? (kya kurna). The little girl had on this day come for half a rupee for rice which the prisoner had bought, and for this half rupee she killed her. The [illegible] time to [illegible] Dan[illegible]

TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF RANOO, THE JEWESS.

(From the Bombay Courier.)

"Among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her,—they have become her enemies.

All that pass by clap their hands—they hiss and wag their heads at the daughter of Jerusalem"

LAMENT OF JER.

Yesterday week Ranoo the Jewess was placed at the bar of the Supreme Court, and arraigned for the murder of a young Hebrew girl named Marian.

The prisoner belonged to a tribe of Jews which has been for ages naturalized amongst the Mahrattas, and almost identified with them—they speak the same language, dress in the same costume, offer to the eye and mind the same darkness of complexion, the same gloom of uncultured intellect, and [illegible] distinguishing feature, phys[illegible] mark them as a separate ra[illegible] on either cheek and the name [illegible]

How much deceit is often in [illegible] "Ranoo the Jewess" was [illegible] young and romantic eye turn[illegible] tively to the bar in expe[illegible] there some lovely ac[illegible] features and noble [illegible] Hebrew maiden—s[illegible] s ake—winning f[illegible] for her youth, h[illegible] but alas such a[illegible] by the appear[illegible] cord. Nor hea[illegible] was there;—w[illegible] disease, the [illegible] with f[illegible] floo[illegible] h[illegible]

this I came out of my house and went up to Daniel's from inside which I heard the voice of a girl crying out " I am dead, I am dead, I am dead"! (muree—muree—muree.)

[Here a short conversation occurred between the bench and the interpreters as to whether the words meant "I am killed" or " I am dead." the original interpretation was preserved and the case proceeded.]

I stood opposite his door; the tatta used as a door was across the door way—the door was fast and the girl was crying inside. When the girl saw me through the tatta she called out " brother (Dada) I implore you come and take me out of the hands of this woman, my bowels are fallen out and I am dying." I burst open the tatta door and ran into the house;—on entering I saw a sword in the girl's mouth. Ranoo, the prisoner, held the sword; —she was twisting the sword in the girl's mouth, in order to break the wind pipe and kill her soon;—she was afraid I suppose of some person coming and interupting her. The hand e of the sword was in the prisoner's hand and about 3 or four inches of the point was in the girl's mouth; her right cheek was gashed from the corner of the lips. There was no one in the r om but the prisoner and the girl; —the girl was lying on her back I knew the girl when I saw her. I dont know her name,—she was about 9 or 10 years old. The prisoner was standing on one side of the girl over her, holding the girl's hand and twisting the sword in her mouth;—she held the girl with her left hand and the sword in her right. I saw the girl's bowels had gushed out. (Here the prisoner requested leave to withdraw for a few minutes;—on her return the examination went on)

I snatched the sword out of her hand: she turned round and stared at me without saying anything;—her eyes were very red and seemed to be starting from their sockets. At first she went out and stood at the door,—afterwards she attempted to run away. When I came out I threw the sword on the top of the house. As I was coming out of the house the little girl got up holding her bowels with both hands and began to run away, but after going about 10 paces she fell down; she then cried out for water, saying, " call my uncle—call my uncle—give me water to drink." A pensioned soobedar's widow of her caste came and gave her water, took her up and carried her to the house of her elder sister. I went along with them. I entered the house,—she saw her sister and her breath passed away. I saw her die. I should know the sword again (the sword is shewn him) 'tis the same,—tis the drummer Daniel's sword. When I took it, it was covered with blood. I did not hear any one speak to the prisoner. On her attempting to run away I saw the drummer Asujee stop her and take her to the quarter guard;—he is here to day, I did not hear her say anything to any one: I was attending to the girl. I had seen the girl before,—she and her brother used to come to Daniel's house to play and eat. They were relations to Daniel—his brother's children. I do not know their family quarrels—here was a former quarrel. Daniel returned home in liquor and beat the prisoner; this happened 5 or 6 days before the murder.—I heard it from my house,—I knew [illegible] on that or on other [illegible] of the girl. [illegible] and known her for the 3 months she lived with Daniel. Daniel is my brother, I never observed anything remarkable in the prisoner's appearance or manner; she was in her perfect senses as any other person. I remember there was a quarrel between her and Daniel; she left Daniel's house and lived in mine for 5 days. I don't know whether Daniel ever came there during that time to persuade her to return; he may or he may not have come, but I did not see him. I am out the greater part of the day. For five days she lived in my house, I gave her to eat and to drink. I cherished her and made much of her. On the evening of the 6th day she returned to my brother's house and the next morning she murdered my child, I dont know what induced her to return to her house. She said in the evening " sister I will now return to my home." I said " go sister in peace"—she then went. The next day my little child went to ask her for half a rupee which she owed for rice, and for half a Rupee she took her life. At about 11 o'clock my girl left me and at about one the people came running to me and said " rise old woman and come! for your daughter Marian is murdered.

This impressive evidence closed the case for the prosecution. The prisoner was now called upon for her defence, when in a voice of deep despondency she addressed the Court as follows: " I have no statement to make, for I know nothing; whether this occurrence ever took place or not I know not—whether I did the deed or another I know not: I was not in my senses, my head was turned and I went up and down the town mad: for 10 or 12 days I was wandering all over Bombay without knowing whither I went or what I did. I am subject to such fits of madness; the same has happened to me once before."

By the Court—Can you call any witness to prove the truth of this statement? Prisoner—Whom shall I call?—who is there that knows or feels for me? In all this world I have neither relation nor friend—there is not a human being whose life yearns to mine-who is there to mourn for Ranoo?—not one!

By the Court—Have you nothing more to say? Prisoner—Nothing.

By the Court—Have you no witness? Prisoner—" Only God."

Sir John Grant, hereupon charged the Jury, who without retiring from the box, brought in a verdict of " Guilty."

The prisoner was now ordered to stand up and asked if she had any thing to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon her according to law. She replied in the same hopeless tone as before, " Alas! alas; I was not in my senses; had I been so would I never have done such a deed?"

Proclamation was hereupon made for silence during the passing of the sentence, and Sir J. Grant, in a voice and manner the most solemn, feeling and impressed he, addressed the prisoner as follows.

" Ranoo, woman; you stand convicted of murder; you have been found guilty of that crime after a most patient investigation by an impartial jury composed in part of your own countrymen. The only defence you have offered is that you perpetrated the act while suffering under a temporary derangement of intellect; persons who commit great and atrocious crimes always do so under the influence of momentary insanity; some baneful passion assumes for an instant the mastery [illegible] deluded slave to the fatal com- [illegible] ch a defence cannot be lis- [illegible] s it can be proved that the [illegible] ich the crim[illegible] would shroud [illegible] ended also other acts;—the [illegible] ty of society will not permit [illegible] a plea to be received in jus- [illegible] crimes I fear but would [illegible] You have, it is true, [illegible] ject to fits of mental [illegible] ead turns; but of [illegible] true, mus. have [illegible] have adduced no [illegible] that on this oc- [illegible] d ys wande ing [illegible] adness, but you [illegible] him this s ate- [illegible] tunat ly [illegible] of its [illegible] at upon the prisoner—she heard it with the still tranquillity of despair, and after the Judge had ceased she remained standing for some minutes in an attitude of the deepest attention, as if the awful words which had meted out her term of existence still sounded in her ears.

During the interval between her sentence and execution Ranoo was visited by the Revd. Mr. Davies and the Revd, Mr. Sargent, a Hebrew missionary; what effect their charitable exertions had we have no means of knowing, but we may conjecture that they were not made in vain, from the fact that she became more cheerful as she approached the hour of her destiny—that hour tarried not, but came quickly and rapidly—for quick and rapid fly the moments to the being who is condemed to die. On Monday morning at 7 o'clock she was led out to execution; on seeing the Paripharnalia of death and the immense multitude who had assembled to witness her exit, she turned pale for an instant, but immediately resuming her firmness she walked up the fatal ladder with a determined step, and about twenty minutes after seven o'clock, without a relative or friend in the world to mourn her lot, without one womanly wail—one sigh—one tear to nature—this unfortunate being met her fate with a fortitude worthy a better cause.—May 8.

" A SAIL TO SURAT."

" A wet sheet and a flowing Sea,
" A wind that follows fast."
&c. &c. &c.

It was in the latter end of the month of May, I embarked on board a Ketch for Surat the wind being favorable I got the tindal to weigh with difficulty the anchor, the crew and himself being half Sea's over with Toddy; after it was up and secured, off we glided, and the breeze freshening with a beautiful serene afternoon, we at sunset passed the Lighthouse, and the wind lowering at 7 we were obliged to drop anchor, as the tide was fast carrying us out of our course to the southward. The moon rising, drove away all fear in regard to the miserable and wretched bark I was on board, the rigging masts &c. appearing to be easily carried away, and the " Kulashes" being all intoxicated, I was not in an enviable situation. The vessel being loaded with all sorts of commodities not very agreeable to the nassal powers, and not being able to sleep from the rolling and likewise the creeking and noise of the different materials of the old " Durya Dowlut" I called for the " Tindal" who was " Peer Bhoye" when we had a long confab of this. that, and that together, and of this, and that, when again went up the anchor and off again we steered to the northward. The confused noise and jabber made me go on Deck, when a large English Merchant Vessel sailed by us in true majestic style, and I could not but compare our rig out to that noble ship then just passing us. A fair wind sprung up and by breakfast time we were a good way on towards Versovah and Bassein; the day being clear the shore on our starboard side was truly picturesque and beautiful in the extreme. Thus we were for eight days hoisting up and dropping anchor till a fresh South-Wester, drove us on in gallant style, and passing Damaun and Parvana Hill Fort which friendly lifted it's head a high; on the 4th of June at day light the famous land mark " Vaux's Tomb" was discerned a head, and at 6 o'clock we entered the mouth of the River Taptee passing over the " Surat Bar" and by numerous boats and small craft waiting for a fair wind to go to the Southward, seemingly filled with Cotton and other Merchandize, several large Ships belonging to Arabs and different opulent Merchants were lying at the Bar, and after showing our passport to the Commodore's Cruizer Thetis Commanded by Captain Middleton, who was killed in the late Burmese War, we sailed on till we came to Toddy bank, where a Bunder Boat was in waiting to convey me up to Surat, as Ketches and other larger craft took days to sail up the River except in high fresh spring tides. The Toddy bank is near the mouth of the River, and where Boats of all description rendesvouz before going to their several destinations, and here they take in Ballast. The Tindal of Bunder Boat informing me I could not [illegible] up the River for an hour or two in [illegible] ence of the tide not being quite high [illegible] sail over the numerous sand banks [illegible] he River is over-run I went ashore [illegible] Vaux's Tomb which was erected [illegible] ion of a Mr. Vaux's and His [illegible] ll lost off the " Surat Bar" [illegible] ca Bank." The building is [illegible] Masonry Musselman style, [illegible] y with a flight of steps, [illegible] indows with every thing [illegible] omb was I learnt put in [illegible] s &c. by the late Mr. [illegible] Collector of Surat, and [illegible] athed, and he was, in [illegible] patron to all the na- [illegible] the European Society [illegible] d man, and his loss is [illegible] ll those who had the [illegible] ance; my guide told [illegible] re constantly from [illegible] the fisherman's Vil- [illegible] ch articles as these [illegible] A fine well of Wa- [illegible] marks of Hog feet [illegible] distinct, and game such as Patridges, Quail &c. were in great abundance. Before returning to the Boat I looked at " Domus" thro' my telescope, and which seemed very pretty on the opposite side of the River, and here and there Gentlemen's Bungaloes being erected on it's frontier on a rising ground make it appear a second Worthing in miniature, and at once the whole view had a diversity of scenery truly imposing, on regaining the Bunder Boat we had to pull some little distance to a merry tune called " Purdase" when on a sudden, in with oars up sail and off we glided, indeed darted along with great velocity wind and tide in our favor, I could not help exclaiming: —

" Bound on, bold bark! with powerful prow,
" Through whitening waves that round thee roar."

I chatted with Tindal " Shaik Mahomed Ooyak" who pointed out to me every passing object as we flew along. Passing by the creek of Domus we soon arrived at a small fisherman's Village called " Mugdallah," and a signal flag staff with a neat small Bungaloe with a party of Lascars. This was a place, and favorite spot in General Reynolds time for pitching his magnificent suite of Tents, but of late years the ground has been ploughed, and the gentry migrated to Domus.

I remember, I remember,
The House ——————
The little Window, where the Sun,
Came pressing in at morn;
He never came a wink too soon,
Now brought too long a day.

A little ahead of the Bungaloe we came to a small Village neat in every respect, called " Oomra" situated on a neck of land which rounding, the famous old city and citadel of Surat brusts at once upon you full view. The sail up to Surat from this point was the prettiest I ever experienced, and on the banks to the right (the left having only a plain) we passed, the old Dutch Gardens, cantonment, French Garden House; Surat Adawlut. Surat Jail, Commodore's Residence, and Dutch Bunder till we came opposite the Castle which had from Oomra a romantic sight as at 12 at noon a Royal Salute was fired and the colours of four nations English, Dutch, Portuguese and King of Delhi flying in honor of His Majesty's Birth day. I now swiftly went on at a slapping pace, till I arrived at the " Moolna ka Kirkee," where I landed, and found a " friend indeed" to meet, and congratulate " me" on my visit to " Old Surat."

WEDNESDAY, 12 MAY, 1830.

We are glad to observe that the H. C. Ship Bridgewater arrived safely at Saugor on the 21st Ultimo. in company with the H. C. Pilot Vessel Hattrass.

We give insertion to an article of the deepest interest in this day's paper, extracted from the Bengal Hurkaru of the 22nd April,—which if correct, will involve all persons on this side of India, interested in the pure administration of Justice, and alive to the responsibility and important duties of those who exercise the functions of Judges, in the most lively sorrow. Should the recall alluded to be inforced, India will loose one of her brightest ornaments, and the Majesty of Justice will be degraded and certainly lowered in the eyes of the native community.

An interesting meeting took place yesterday, when many of the most respectable Natives of Bombay assembled to read an address to Captain JERVIS, expressive of their feelings on his approaching departure from among them. Several Gentleman and Ladies attended.—The following was the addres delivered by FRAMJEE COWASJEE into Arcasecr Hormajee's hands to be read.

TO CAPTAIN G. R. JERVIS,
Late Secretary to Native Education Society.
SIR,

We the undersigned Members of the Native Community of Bombay, would ever reproach ourselves for having omitted to perform a sacred duty did we not adopt this mode of expressing, in the name of ourselves and of the Native Community our sincere and deep regret at your approaching departure from Bombay. For, during seven years tha you have acted as Secretary to this Society, we have fully learned to appreciate the affable liating manners, the conversancy with Native Languages and customs, and the ensive literary and scientific acquirements ich rendered you so peculiarly qualified for t situation, and which has enabled you to note so efficaciously the interests of the iety.

your unceasing exertions and unabated is the Society chiefly indebted for the tion of the present commodious Buildings propriated to it's use, on a spot of ground so iciously selected for general convenience, the introduction into the Schools of an proved system of Education, for the publi tion of numerous and valuable works written in or translated into the Native languages, for an useful and extensive library of Oriental and English works, and most particularly for having induced the Native Princes, Chiefs and other Gentlemen to create a Fund of nearly two lacs and fifty thousand Rupees for providing the necessary means of promoting amongst the Natives of this country a knowledge of the higher branches of Science and literature. Nor ought we to omit amongst the benefits which the Society has derived from your zeal and abilities your own translations into Maratha and Goojratee of a complete course of Arithmetic and Mathematics, as taught in Europe; the correctness and utility of which translations have been so gratifyingly testified by the great number of Copies which have been already circulated, and by the demand which still continues for them.

It is, to your personal exertions and your unwearied Superintendence that the Lithographic Establishment of the Society has acquired such perfection, that the unrivaled excellence, with which the works executed at it have been printed has attracted general notice, and obtained the most marked and unqualified praises, nor can we sufficiently admire this new invention which admits of works being printed at so cheap a rate as to place them within the reach of all the Natives who can spare a little money; and then furnishes the Society with the most effectual means for diffusing mental and moral instruction.

To the judicious and able manner, therefore, in which you have performed the arduous duties of Secretary to a newly instituted Society, and conciliated the Natives to the exerting an active and beneficial co operation in a system so entirely novel to them must be principally attributed the singular efficiency to which the Society [illegible] short period that has elapsed since it's foundation. Thus convinced as we are of your distinguished merits and the valuable Services which you have rendered to the Native Community while Secretary, we cannot but view your resignation of that Office and your departure to Poona as the subject of deep concern; nor refrain from thus expressing our sincere regret at the separation which must in consequence take place between us, and conveying to you the sincere acknowledgements of the Native Community for the numerous kindnesses and benefits which it has received from you and which it will ever most gratefu ly remember.

In testimony therefore, of the sincerity of these sentiments and as a lasting memorial of the high estimation in which we hold your private and public character we beg to request your acceptance of a piece off Plate value Rupees 3000.

We have the honor to remain
Sir,
Your very obliged Servants.

Captain JERVIS's Answer.

GENTLEMEN,

To find on my departure from Bombay, that I shall carry with me your approbation and esteem, is of itself most pleasing; but you have expressed your sentiments in such gratifying terms that I can neither describe the emotion excited in my breast, nor render an adequate acknowledgement for so invaluable a testimonial in favor of my character and conduct. From the praises, which your kindness has induced you to confer, I derive the most desirable reward for any exertions I may have made in the promotion of education amongst your countrymen, and the value of such praises enhanced by the high respectability of the persons, by whom they have been expressed and by the peculiar fitness of those persons to estimate the utility and extent of my endeavours during the seven years I have had the honor to be secretary to the society established and maintained by their liberality.

It is chiefly to the encouragement held out by Government for the purpose of procuring useful translations, and to the liberality with which it has given them publication, that you are indebted for the extensive and valuable collection of books now at your disposal.

Your own generous contribution afforded the means of raising funds for the general purposes of your society, and your own good judgment determined on that system for conducting education, which has obtained such gratifying success. I have been merely instrumental in giving effect to the measures which were devised by the Government and by you and with respect to the accumulation of the funds for promoting amongst the natives of this country a knowledge of the higher branches of science and literature, I can only claim the merit of having suggested, what You Considered the best mode of testifying your feeling towards the founder of your Institution, on his departure for England.

Upheld as I have been by your support, and favored, by your confidence and friendship for so many years of close intercourse, I feel deep regret at our approaching separation. My place however is filled by one, whose talents will ensure the most successful continuation to your great undertakings and whose amiability cannot fail to acquire your warmest regard.

Should Government permit of my receiving the plate, which you have so munificently offered to me, I shall be most happy in finding myself at liberty to do so, but whether it shall or shall not be in my power to accept it, I shall always feel truly proud and grateful for the additional testimonial you have thus given of your regard regard for, Gentlemen.

Yours most truly and faithfully,

Bombay, 11*th May* 1830.

On the departure of a man of power from a place like this, we do not wonder at many a grateful feeling being created at the remembrance of benefits conferred and hopes realized, but it is seldom that a private individual carries away with him such a testimony of general regard as was given to Capt. Jervis at this Assembly. The extraordinary token of high admiration which our late beloved Governor received, not we will say, on resigning the reins of Government, but on retiring from his situation as a member of the Society which he moved in, is perhaps the sole instance on record in the history of any country, where such universal esteem for private character was ever elicited in like circumstances: not wrung multitude, but freely and spontaneously given by the consenting voice of a grateful people.—We would seperate such an instance entirely from any connection with his rule and his rank. It was a tribute due to his private work. We do not compare the present occurrence with that, but the same cause having principally excited both these events, has as naturally in our minds, associated their names, as whenever Education of the Natives is heard, or thought of. There was a splendour and magnificence in the one tribute, well according with the character and works of the man to whom it was paid. There is a generosity and gratefulness in this last, which will repay the object of them for many a labourious hour of toil and pain, and the man is much to be pitied and despised who delights not to see trouble so returned, Merit so rewarded.

THE MYSTERIOUS BOX.

It appears from two affidavits, published within these few days, that the Chancery proceedings respecting the disputed possession of a box of sealed papers, supposed to relate to some extraordinary circumstances connected with the parentage of Captain Garth, are still going on. Some time back, it will be recollected, a bill was filed in the Court of Chancery by Captain Garth, the alleged natural son of General Garth by a lady of illustrious birth, for the recovery of a certain box of papers relating to his private history, which had got into the hands of Messrs. Paul, Snow, and Co., with whom they had been deposited by Sir Herbert Taylor and Mr. Charles Molloy Westmacott, the proprietor of The Age newspaper. The bill set forth the circumstances under which this box was deposited in the hands of the parties in question; and at the time excited much inquiry, although the contents of the papers were kept a secret. Sir Herbert Taylor and Mr. Westmacott have now filed their answers to the bill and the case will of course, in due time, come before the Lord Chancellor for adjudication.

These affidavits state, in substance, that Captain Garth had, by surreptitious means, contrived circumstance, especially as at the time he was pouring under indisposition; that these papers contained documents and correspondence touching the birth of the said Captain Garth, the publication of which would have deeply wounded the feelings of certain high personages; and that with a view of obtaining money to relieve himself from the embarrassments under which he laboured, the Captain threatened, and actually determined, to give them publicity, For this purpose he applied to Mr. Westmatcott, who, on ascertaining their character, thought it more advisable to adopt a different course and having apprized Sir Herbert Taylor and General Garth of the objects of the Captain, a negociation was commenced, with a view, on the part of Sir Herbert Taylor and General Garth, of regaining possession of the papers and destroying them, feeling, as they did, that they were caculated to give offence, as well as to excite prejudice towards persons for whom they were interested. The object of this negotiation was to learn the terms upon which Captain Garth would consent to part with the papers; and after repeated interviews between Sir Herbert Taylor, Mr. Charles Frederick Williams on the part of General Garth) and Mr. Wesmacott, who acted as the authorized agent of Captain Garth, it was agreed to pay Captain Garth's debts, the amount of which he stated to be 8000*l.*, and to grant him an annuity of 2,400*l.* a year, half of which was guaranteed by Sir Herbert Taylor, and the other half by Mr. Williams, on the part of General Garth. These preliminaries adjusted the Captain received 3000*l.* in advance; and, in November last, delivered the mysterious box to Sir Herbert Taylor and Mr. Westmacott, with a solemn pledge that it contained all the papers it was supposed originally to hold, and that no copies or extracts had been taken therefrom. The box, sealed with the seals of Sir Herbert Taylor and Mr. Westmacott, was by them deposited in the hands of Paul, Snow, and Co., the bankers, who gave a receipt for it, with an understanding that it was not to be redelivered unless under the joint authority of the said Sir Herbert Taylor and Mr. Westmacott. Mr. Wesmacott was then desired to take steps to arrange Captain Garth's affairs, but that he found impossible; the Captain did not adhere to his old list of creditors but incurred new debts, kept up a ruinous establishment at Melton Mowbray, and, to crown all, divulged to divers persons the secrets of the box which he had solemly promised to keep secret, added to which, it turned out that he had reserved copies, of the contents of the papers deposited in the box. Still Sir Herbert and General Garth (his father) agreed to increase the sum for the liquidation of his debts to 10,000l. and his annuity to 3000. per annum, upon condition that he retired to the Continent till his affairs were arranged; but he neither did this, nor attended in the least to his remonstrances. As for the papers, it is first denied that they were Captain Garth's at all; next, that Mr. Westmacott had a lien upon them for money advanced by him for Captain Garth; and lastly, that by his own breach of covenant he had forfeited all right to their restoration; whereas, if he had complied with the wishes of those who had his interest at heart, all that had been promised would have been fully accomplished.

No allusion is made to the nature of the papers in the box, and Sir Herbert Taylor disclaims all knowledge of their contents, but says that he believes their publication would be painful to the feelings of the party for whom he is interested. They do not in any manner relate, according to his knowledge and belief, to the complainant's fortune, nor to any claims which he had upon any person, nor to the mode of substantiating or enforcing any such claims; and accordingly that the documents, papers, and correspondence were of great and considerable importance, but not of any just and legitimate value. Not having perused the said documents, papers, and correspondence, nor any part thereof, nor been made acquainted with their contents, he cannot set forth, of his own knowledge, to what they really relate.

Mr. Westmacott denies the charge of being engaged in any combination or conspiracy to detain the box in question, and says he acted in no other light but as the friend and agent of Captain Garth, until some time previous to the 26th of December last, when he ceased to act, in consequence of having discovered that the complainant had violated the stipulations of the agreement, and when he found it impossible, from the complainant's conduct, to carry its stipulations into effect. He declares that he does not believe that the documents and papers in the box are of great or any value or importance to the complainant, or the loss thereof would be injurious to him.

By these affidavits, no light is thrown upon the question supposed to be involved, "who are the real parents of Captain Garth?" and in the present stage of the affair, it is impossible to form any conjecture, whether the contents of the box, if it really contains a secret, will ever be exposed to the curiosity of the public.

"THE MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR" AGAIN.

(From the Standard.)

We have been compelled to encumber our columns with two long affidavits, made by Sir Herbert Taylor, and Mr. C. Westmacott, in the case of Captain Garth. The store is probably well known to all our readers. Lest any should, however, be ignorant, and that all may have a direct clue to the Chancery proceedings, we will briefly recapitulate its leading facts.

Captain Garth is the son of General Garth. General Garth is, by marriage fulfilling all the moral and religious conditions of such a contract, the husband of an illustrious lady. The union, however, though such as must satisfy the most scrupulous and delicate conscience is, by a law affecting one family, and one only, in the realm, politically invalid. It was, therefore, deemed proper to withhold any public declaration of it, though no attempt, we believe, was ever made to conceal it from such of the immediate connexions of the parties as were of discreet age. Captain Garth, the offspring of the marriage, was therefore educated at a certain known expence above that rank; for it is difficult to explain, from any other causes the course which he has ran.

Overwhelmed with debts, Captain Garth having exhausted all fair means of importuning his unhappy parents to administer to his necessities, betook himself at last to menaces, and having "surreptitiously obtained" a number of letters that had passed between his father and mother in the confidence of married life—letters which we know contained, and could have contained, nothing but what would naturally and innocently pass between persons in that close relation---nothing that was not honourable to the illustrious lady---nothing in the slightest degree reflecting on any member of her family---having "surreptiously obtained" these letters, Captain Garth threatened to publish them in full, if he should not be paid for their suppression. The lady, whose dreadful misfortune is to have given birth to such a son, was at the time in extremely delicate health from nervous affection; the shock of such a cruel threat alone would kill her, and there were other considerations of great weight, which would strongly urge the propriety of suppresing the affair. The marriage which it was threatened to expose, was in some measure a violation of the law, and by a member of the family most bound to respect it. Nothing could be said in its justification, in fact, by which the wisdom of a law to which we believe, the first person in the country is strongly attached, would not be condemned. There was, too, the inconvenience to be apprehended from exposing to the gluttinous curiosity of a public, ever greedy of gossip, all the little trifling communications between man and wife, running through several years—through the seasons of those undignified joys and cares of which the staple of our lives is composed. What brother, we ask, would like to see the public walls posted with the private letters of his beloved sister---to her husband?

This matter was seen at once in its proper light by an illustrious person, whose sagacity and good taste have never been found to fail. As prince and brother he felt it his duty to put an end to the perplexing difficulty at any reasonable sacrifice: perhaps he considered, too, that still and prodigal as Garth had been, he was a young man, he might reform; and as a member of the most illustrious family in the empire, by a morally and religiously, though not politically, valid marriage he was entitled to some respectable provision from that family. Sir H. Taylor was therefore authorised to offer Garth the means of relieving himself from the present difficulties, and also an annuity, which would enable him to maintain a rank in some degree suitable to the circumstances of his birth. (eight thousand pounds to pay debts, and two thousand pounds annuity, which, for some objects, could not be thought too much.) Two conditions, however, were to be imposed, which sufficiently indicate the kindly spirit in which the negociations were carried on by Sir Herbert, and the illustrious party for whom he acted. Garth was required to reform his plan of life by breaking up a ruinous establishment, and to put the papers which he had "surreptitiously obtained" into hands in which they could not be employed to wound his mother's feelings, or the feelings of her family. Pending negotiations, the papers were placed under seal in the house of "Paul, Snow, and Co." the respectable bankers.

Garth's agent in the affair. Mr. Westmacott, a literary gentleman, who seems to be by far too honourable a man to suit the purposes of his employer, was made, with Sir Herbert Taylor, the joint guardian of the box. These two gentlemen for some time urged the arrangement with honourable zeal, but with perfect fairness on both sides, when is was found impossible (as we see by the affidavits) to do any thing, from the utter shuffling and incorrigible folly of the youth. No true statement of his debts could be obtained from him---no promise of reform could be enforced. The comprise, therefore, broke off, and the only fact which it was material to withhold from the public, namely, Captain, Garth's relation to an illustrious lady, having transpired in the course of it, there is not much chance of its being renewed; in the mean time the Captain has filed a bill in Chancery for the recovery of the "surreptitiously obtained" papers, and this bill has been answered by the affidavits.---from the Atlas.

Horrible MURDERS at BATH, followed by SUICIDE.

On Monday morning, about twenty minutes before six o'clock, a man of the name of Beere, lodging, with his wife and child, at No. 1, Williams-place, at the back of St. James's-street, Bath, murdered both the latter by cutting their throats with a razor. Just before six o'clock, Mrs. Chappel, another lodger in the house, sleeping in the next room to Beere, fancied she heard something like a gurgling in a throat. She immediately went to the door and called to Mrs. Beere, and asked if she was ill, but having repeated her call two or three times without any answer, she opened the door, and went into the room, and again asked Mrs. Beere if she was ill, to which no answer could be obtained; she began then to suspect all was not right, and told her husband to strike a light, on entering the room with which, she discovered a sight of horror past the power of words to describe. The mother was lying on her back, with one hand across her breast, and her throat cut from one angle of the jaw to the other, dividing some of the principal arteries and windpipe, and the little innocent, about four months old, which appeared to have been lately drawn from the breast for the murderous purpose, was lying on its side, with its head severed excepting by a bit of skin at the back part of the neck; the bodies were weltering in blood, a pool of which, under the bed, extended across the room. It was evidently the result of a cool and deliberate intent, for it appeared that the deed was committed while the sufferers were asleep, there having been no noise heard by any of the lodgers or neighbours excepting that described by Mrs. Chapple, which was after the deed had been perpetrated, and the murderer had escaped. Mr White, Surgeon, was called in at six o'clock—too late, of course, to be of any service, and the result of his examination tended to show that there was no struggling, and the bed-clothes were not disturbed. There were other points that seem to prove the deliberateness of the act. The bloody razor was lying open on a box by the side of the bed, and the case was lying on the dresser down stairs in the kitchen, and with it a lath-hatchet, as though intended for use if the murderer had [illegible] distant idea cannot be formed. Beere is described by the lodgers as being a very steady man, fond of his wife and his home, and dotingly fond of his child, which he was always caressing when at home; nor have they latterly seen any alteration in his conduct. All the pervious day, Sunday, both Beere and his wife were at home, and appeared as usual, very comfortable and happy, and retired to bed as usual, at ten o'clock. Beere was a journeyman baker, and had been employed as foreman by Mr. Davies, of St. James's-street, for nearly the last twelve months, during which time his employer had found him attentive to his business, a trust-worthy servant in his master's absence, particularly obliging, and apparently happy. Mr. and Mrs. Davies saw no alteration in his conduct up to the latest period, except that when he came on Sunday evening to prepare for the next morning's baking, he was about two hours later than his usual time, but he did his business very properly, and seemed in his manner as usual.

Immediately after the discovery of the above horrible murder, the officers of justice were apprised of it, and were quickly on the alert to apprehend the perpetrator. Shortly after daylight, a baker's jacket, with blood on it, was seen lying on the bank of the river, near Bedford-street Walcot; in consequence of which William George' of Bathwick, took a boat to search the river, and found the body of Beere in the water, with life quite extinct, at the bottom of Bedford-street. The body was thence taken to Walcot workhouse.

INQUEST ON THE BODIES.

(From the Bath Gazette of Wednesday.)

An inquest was held yesterday at the Walcot poor-house before Mr. Ashford, Coroner, on the bodies of James Beere, the husband, Mary Beere, his wife, and Charles Beere, their infant son. The Jury, after having been sworn, proceeded to view the body of the man lying in the poor-house, and also the bodies of his wife and child, at the house where the murder was committed. The bodies of the latter presented a horrible spectacle, the mother having a large and deep gash completely across the throat, and a smaller one just below the chin; the child's head was nearly served from the body, the vertebra being quite cut through, and nothing but a small portion of the flesh kept the head from complete seperation. The bed was covered with blood. On a box which lay beside the bed was found a razor deeply notched and clotted with blood; and in the hitchen below was found a case, apparently the case of the razor, and a plasterer's hatchet or lathing hammer, which appeared sharpened and newly ground. When the Jury returned, the first witness called was Mr. W Russell, who, with the assistance of two men, succeeded in finding the body of James Beere, and conveyed it to Walcot poor-house.

W. Muckleway, fellow servant of Beere's, next deposed that he had lived with the deceased fifteen months, and during that time could speak as to his general good character, and had never noticed any indication of insanity. On the Saturday previous to the murder Beere had complained of illness in his head, and had left his work about six o'clock on that evening; witness saw him again on Sunday morning about nine o'clock, at the bake-bouse; he still complained of illness, and appeared very dejected and low; he proceeded with his work until eleven o'clock, when he said he should wish to go home, and left. Witness did not see deceased afterwards. He had always believed him to be a fond and affectionate husband, and had never heard him speak of his wife but in the best of terms.

Catherine Elizabeth Chappell was then called.—Witness slept in the next room to the deceased on the same floor, she heard no noise of quarrelling on the night in question, and must have heard it had such an event taken place. She had seen the deceased on the Saturday morning after his return from work, taken lunch with his wife comfortably and happily; she had never seen any indication of insanity, and coincided in the opinion of the former witness, that she believed them to be a happy and contented couple. The husband of the witness confirmed the above statement.

This concluded the evidence touching the case of James Beere, but the Jury deferred giving a verdict until the witnesses had been examined relative to the death of the mother and child. Touching the par of the case.

Catherine E. Chappell was recalled and deposed that about half-past five, on Monday morning, she heard some one open the door of the room where Beere and his wife slept, and hurry down stairs; she also heard a noise like the gurgling of blood in the throat; and thinking that Mary Beere had been taken ill, she got out of bed, and knocking at the door, inquired what was the matter. No answer being returned, she entered the room, but the darkness prevented her from perceiving anything amiss, and again receiving no answer, she desired her husband to bring a light; upon entering the room with the candle, the horrid scene presented itself; the throat of the woman being cut from ear to ear, the head of the infant nearly separated from its body, and blood running from the bed to the floor in a continued stream. After recovering from the shock, she dispatched her husband for a medical gentleman, and alarmed the neighbours; immediate intelligence was also given at the Town-hall to the police officers.

Cottle, the police-officer, stated, that on the first intelligence of the murder he made inquiry for the husband at the house of his parents in the Upper Bristol-road; he found the mother and daughter seated at breakfast; and on asking the mother if she knew where her son was, they both appeared much agitated, and inquired of what crime he had been guilty? He then told them that the son had committed murder on the bodies of his wife and child: upon hearing this, the daughter exclaimed to the mother, "Oh! mother, then you are done."

Upon the exanination of Jane Beere, the girl who made use of the above expression, she solemnly denied this particular part of the officer's statement; but there was much prevarication throughout the whole of the evidence, and many things were denied by her, which subsequent witnesses (her own father and mother,) proved to be facts. The evidence of the father and mother, who were examined, went to prove that a great degree of jealousy and ill-will had existed between the female part of the family, on account of a charge made by the deceased against his sister of taking money; and that they (the father and mother) had frequent quarrels, with their son on account of his marriage with the deceased, to [illegible] had always conducted herself with great propriety.

The Jury, after many hours' patient investigation, returned the following verdicts:—In the case of Jas. Beere, Felo-de-se; in that of the mother and child, Wilful Murder against James Beere, the husband, who is to be buried according to the late Act provided for such cases, in the church-yard, in the night, but without the usual burial service.—Bell's Mess, Nov. 30.

LITERATURE.

The Comic Annual. By Thomas Hood, Esq. London, 1830.

THIS is a volume conceived and executed in the happiest spirit of fun. Mr. HOOD is the most inimitable torturer of words that ever uttered a pun. His labour must be great, for he pursues into the most distant ramifications all possible analogies and meanings of words and things, so that he produces out of nothing ample materials of mirth. We cannot clearly satisfy ourselves as to the rank which this sort of talent should hold—for talent it is—but we are perfectly satisfied that a merrier fellow does not live in Christendom than the designer, author, and arranger of this little volume. We cannot attempt a description of the book, for there are no means of describing it except by copying wholesale his quibbles and quips, which would be unfair; or getting his wood-cuts re-engraved for our pages, which would be troublesome. One half of his present oddities consists in eccentric engravings, caricaturing popular words and sayings—the other half in illustrative fragments, prose and verse, some of which, by way of specimen, we copy. Of his engravings, it is not too much to say, that they embody the satire of HOGARTH, in little, wanting its wisdom, while they present a keener picture of waggery and humour. It must, of course, be admitted, that HOOD's humour hath reference solely to the art of punning. Do what he may, it is a pun, but then the pun frequenfly carries weight. Here we have a lady dressed out in fans, and underneath is written "Fanny:" also a stage-coach upset, and all the passengers thrown off into a river, underlined by the motto, "A clear stage and no favour:" also, a postman and muffin-man striding along, with the line underneath, "The evening bells." But as we cannot by dry rectal afford an adequate idea of the character of this portion of the book, we dedicate what space we can to that which is transferiable. The first to begin with is the dedication to Sir FRANCIS FREELING, the respectable secretary to the post-office.

To Sir Francis Freeling, Bart, the great Patron of Letters, Foreign, General, and Twopenny; distinguished alike by his fostering care of the Bell Letters, and his Antiquarian regard for the Dead Letters; whose increasing efforts to forward the spread of intelligence, as a Corresponding Member of all Societies (and no man fills his Post better) have singly, doubly, and trebly, endeared him to every class—this first volume of The Comic Annual, is, with frank permission, gratefully inscribed, by Thomas Hood.

We know not whether this dedication may not convey a compliment under its curreat of puns, but all events it is felicitous in its way. Next, take the picture of.

A GREENWICH PENSIONER,

Is a sort of stranded marine animal, that the receding tide of life has left high and dry on the shore. He pines for his element like a Sea Bear, and misses his briny washings and wettings. What the ocean could not do, the land does, for it makes him sick; he cannot digest properly unless his body is rolled and tumbled about like a barrel-churn. Terra firma is good enough he thinks to touch at for wood and water, but nothing more. There is no wind he swears ashore—every day of his life is a dead calm—a thing above all others he detests—he would like it better for an occasional earthquake. Walk he cannot, the ground being so still and steady that he is puzzled to keep his legs, and ride he will not, for he disdains a craft whose rudder is forward and not astern.

Inland scenery is his especial aversion. He despises a tree "before the mast," and would give all the singing birds of Creation for a Boatswain's whistle. He hates prospects, but enjoys retrospects. An old boat, a stray anchor, or decayed mooring ring, will set him dreaming for hours. He splices sea and land ideas together. He reads of "shooting off a tie at Battersea," and it reminds him of a ball carrying away his own pigtail. "Canvassing for a situation," recals running with all sails set for a station at Aboukir. He has the advantage of our Economists as to the "Standard of Value," knowing it to be the British ensign. The Announcement of "an arrival of foreign vessels, with our ports open," claps him into a Paradise of prize money, with Poll of the Pint He wonders sometimes at "petitions to be discharged from the Fleet," but sympathises with those in the Marshalsea Court, as subject to a Sea Court Martial. Finally, try him even in the learned languages, by asking him for the meaning of "Georgius Rex," and he will answer without hesitation, "The wrecks of the Royal George." Mr. Hood can sometimes, we perceive, commit a sly satire. The following is a capital bit at the mawkish sentimentality of the annuals, and happily ridicules the tender nothingness of some of the tales.

THE FURLOUGH—AN IRISH ANECDOTE.

"Time was called."—BOXIANA.

In the autumn of 1825, some private affairs called me into the sister kingdom; and as I did not travel, like Polyphemus, with my eye out, I gathered a few samples of Irish character, amongst which was the following incident.

I was standing one morning at the window of "mine Inn," when my attention was attracted by a scene that took place beneath. The Belfast coach was standing at the door, and on the roof, in front, sat a solitary outside passenger, a fine young fellow in the uniform of the Connaught Rangers. Below, by the front wheel, stood an old woman seemingly his mother, a young man, and a younger woman, sister or sweetheart; and they were all earnestly entreating the young soldier to descend from his seat on the coach.

"Come down wid ye, Thady"—the speaker was the old woman—"Come down now to your ould mother. Sure it's flog ye they will, and strip the flesh off the bones I give ye. Come down Thady, darlin!"

"It's honour, mother," was the short reply of the soldier; and with clenched hands and set teeth, he took a stiffer posture on the coach.

"Thady, come down—come down now ye fool of the world—come along down wid ye!" The tone of the present appeal was more impatient and peremptory than the last; and the answer was more promptly and steruly pronounced: "It's honour, brother!" and the body of the speaker rose more rigidly erect than ever on the roof.

"O Thady, come down! sure it's me, your own Kathleen, that bids ye. Come down, or ye'll break the heart of me, Thady, jewel; come down then!" The poor girl wrung her hands as she said it, and cast a look upward, that had a visible effect on the muscles of the soldier's countenance. There was more tenderness in his tone, but it conveyed the same resolution as before.

"It's honour, honour bright, Kathleen!" and, as if to defend himself from another glance, he fixed his look steadfastly in front, while the renewed entreaties burst from all three in chorus, with the same answer.

"Come down, Thady, honey!—Thady, ye fool, come down!—O Thady, come down to me!"

"It's honour, mother!—It's honour, brother!—Honour bright, my own Kathleen!"

Although the poor fellow was a private, this appeal was so public, that I did not hesitate to go down and inquire into the particulars of the distress, It appeared that he had been home, on Furlough, to visit his family—and having exceeded as he thought the term of his leave, he was going to rejoin his regiment, and to undergo the penalty of his neglect. I asked him when the Furlough expired.

"The first of March, your honour—bad luck to it of all the black days in the world—and here it is, come sudden on me like a shot!"

"The first of March!—why, my good fellow, you have a day to spare then—the first of March will not be here till to-morrow. It is Leap Year, and February has twenty-nine days."

The soldier was thunder-struck—Oh, Mother, Mother!—the Divil fly away wid yere ould Almanack—a base cratur of a book, to be deceaven one, afther living so long in the family of us!"

His first impulse was to cut a caper on the roof of the coach, and throw up his cap, with a loud Hurrah!—His second, was to throw himself into the arms of his Kathleen, and the third, was to wring my hand off in acknowledgment.—

"It's a happy man I am, your Honour, for my word's saved, and all by your Honour's means.—Long life to your Honour for the same!—May ye live a long hundred—and leap-years every one of them!"—Atlas, To be Concluded.
